

Dr. Barry Wright

Dr Barry Wright is a child and adolescent psychiatrist in York, England and an Honorary Senior Lecturer at the Hull York Medical School. He played a key role in establishing the National Deaf Child and Adolescent Mental Health Service (National Deaf CAMHS) in England and has been its Clinical Lead since it began. The National Deaf CAMHS has ten centres in England spread geographically across the country. Barry runs the medical student curriculum for mental health at the Hull York Medical School. He does research on a range of topics and has an interest in improving outcomes for children with neurodevelopmental difficulties. He is also very interested in any interventions early in life that improve social and emotional outcomes.
